

THREE CAUGHT TRYING TO KIDNAP A YOUNG WIFE

Italians Had Told Her to Be Ready to Go West to Former Sweetheart.

DEATH FOR REFUSAL

Husband and Babes Menaced Too, but Mother Had Detectives Waiting.

Three men, charged with a daring attempt to kidnap a young married woman and ship her out West to a man who loves her, were arraigned in Adams Street Police Court, Brooklyn, to-day.

The woman they are alleged to have plotted to kidnap is the mother of two children. She is Mrs. Angelina Mon-tella, twenty-three, living with her husband at No. 39 East New York avenue, Brooklyn.

Before Mrs. Montella's marriage three years ago she counted among her admirers Salvatore Futura, a hot-blooded countryman, who quit New York when his ardent courting ended in defeat. He went to the West and established himself as a farmer. The Italian detectives believe Futura's intention for the girl became all the stronger. A letter was recently received by his brother, Francesco Futura, of Brooklyn, which read, in part:

"Angelina must be brought to me at all hazards. Get her and come with her yourself. Let nothing money, but fear stand in your way. I shall expect you to carry out my orders."

Mrs. Montella was approached by three strange Italians three days ago.
They told her Salvatore Futura wanted her; that she must go to him with them or die. She was told also that her husband, her children and other relatives would be slain if she dared disobey.

Mrs. Futura did not tell her husband, she feared for his life. She told all, however, to her mother-in-law, and the latter notified John Pantora, chief of the recently formed Detective Bureau in Brooklyn.

Three men had told the young wife and mother they would call for her last night and she must be ready to accompany them. They did call.
The detectives were there before them.
When the three evil-visaged men entered the apartment Pantora and Detective Grimaldi were hiding in the rooms.

The three men entered without a word. They placed two revolvers, a razor, a butcher knife and two stilet-tos on the table.

"If you do not come with us we will use the things you and we have here," one of the men said. "Now come."

The man had hardly spoken when the two detectives leaped into the room with revolvers drawn. They covered the unarmed Italians, and Pantora ordered:

"You are under arrest!"

Put Up Hard Fight.

"Never!" shouted one of the men.
"I have just done twenty years in Italy for murder and I am not going to jail now."

Then followed a desperate fight. The detectives, with their night sticks, beat the three Italians down and arrested them. Then other policemen and detectives came and the three men were carried off to State street headquarters.

Futura's companions said they were Salvatore Santilli, of Mount Vernon, and Francesco Ritoche, of New Canaan, Conn. Futura said he lived at No. 26 Fulton street.

The letters from Futura's brother were found in his pockets. The men were questioned closely, but only shook their heads and refused to reply to any question. The letters were unopened. The police in running down the writer, there is a suspicion that another motive was behind the attempted kidnaping.

Mrs. Montella was recently a witness against members of the Black Hand Society, and the detective suspect that she was to have been sent to her old sweetheart to get her out of reach of the courts here.
